November 2006
Book Blurb™

Our feature this month is New York author and wellness expert Lee Welles. Her book, Gaia Girls: Enter the Earth is a good Earth Day Book. It is a good anytime book. This is the first book in a series that deals with helping the environment with the help of Elizabeth, our fourth grade savior. You have to ask yourself, Isn't everyday Earth Day? Don't we owe it to our existence to keep Mother Earth vibrant and strong? Free from pollutants? Since November is about Thanksgiving, harvests, eating with family and friends, I thought it appropriate to feature a book concerning saving Mother Earth.

These 320 pages go quickly as we learn about the Three Oaks Farm, established in 1782 on which Elizabeth, her parents, and her dog Maizey reside and the corporate Giant, Harmony Farms. This Corporation wants to buy up land without regard to living within balance, in harmony with its neighbors. With profits dwindling from the low harvest, the other family farms such as the Jeffries and Danner are attracted to the offer to sell their farms. In addition, the townspeople and mayor are for helping the corporate giant once a new school is offered to make the idea of a big corporation more attractive.

This story involves the yin and yang of two best friends as one has to move away. It deals with the feelings of pain, humor, suspense and responsibility. It teaches there are ramifications to one's actions that must be considered.

There are even clues planted throughout the pictures on each chapters' first page to help you learn a key message.

This book is rated G for You Go Green Girl! Environmental education is crucial for all of us to have. Please visit our catalogue to order a book.
